BURBANK, Calif. (July 31, 2015) – The National Procurement Institute has awarded the City of Burbank a prestigious Achievement of Excellence in Procurement Award. The award recognizes public agencies and non-profit organizations for best practices and organizational excellence when obtaining goods and services.

“I’m proud of the staff and the efforts that they’ve taken to achieve this award,” said Jennifer Becker, Deputy Financial Services Director for the City of Burbank. “Purchasing Manager, Paul Herman and his staff work continuously to enhance our ability to offer a fair and competitive bid process and as a result receive maximum value for our tax dollars. This award reflects all of that hard work and we’re honored to receive it for the third year in a row.”

Agencies receiving the award demonstrate excellence in the areas of innovation, professionalism, productivity, leadership and utilization of online bidding processes.
